The Tales of YOGI BEAR

FISHING FOR JAM BUNS

1. Yogi sniffed the air and smelled one of his favourite smells—JAM BUNS. "Here we go again", sighed Boo Boo, Yogi's little friend, when Yogi walked off, his nose twitching in the air. Soon they spotted some picnickers who were about to have jam buns for tea.

2. Ranger Smith looked after Jellystone Park and made sure that everybody kept to the rules. Hardly had Yogi stepped out from the trees when Ranger Smith spotted him and ordered him back to the part of the park where the bears belonged.

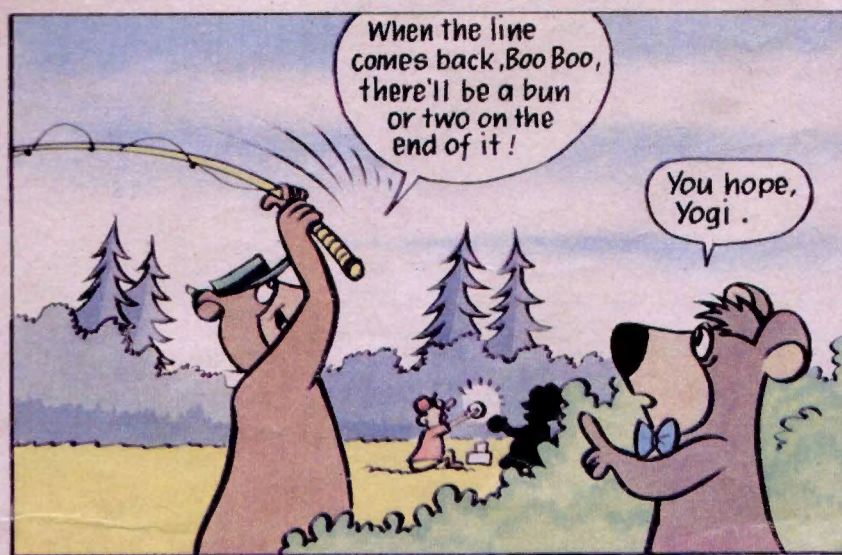

Yogi wandered back to the lake, but he brightened when he saw a fishing rod that someone had left behind. Boo Boo who saw it first. He hoped that he could catch some fish for their supper; but he was still hungry for the jam buns.

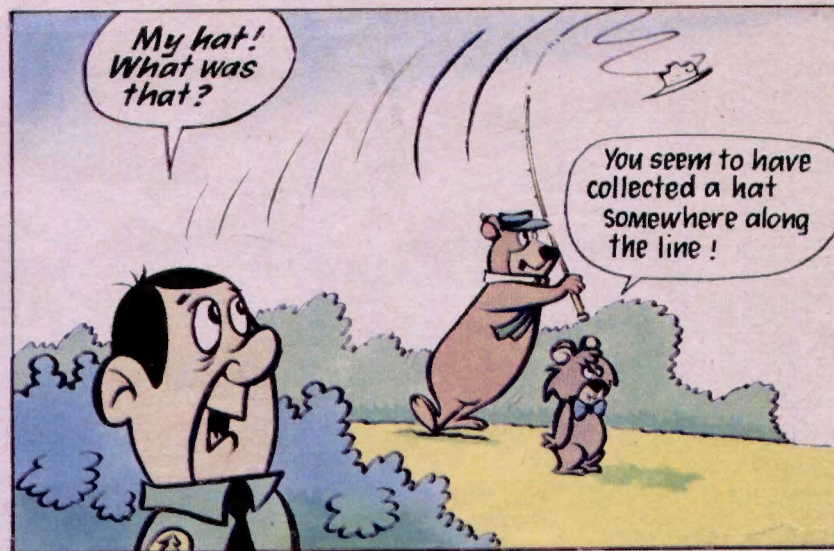

4. It was a fine fishing rod. "Whoever left it lying about must have more money than sense", said Yogi, wagging the whippy rod. "With me, its the other way round as you will be able to see if you care to follow me back to the picnic ground, Boo Boo", he added.

5. Boo Boo followed Yogi back to the picnic ground. In the middle of the picnic spread was the plate with the jam buns. "Here we go, Boo Boo boy", Yogi happily chuckled as he swung back the rod to cast the line.

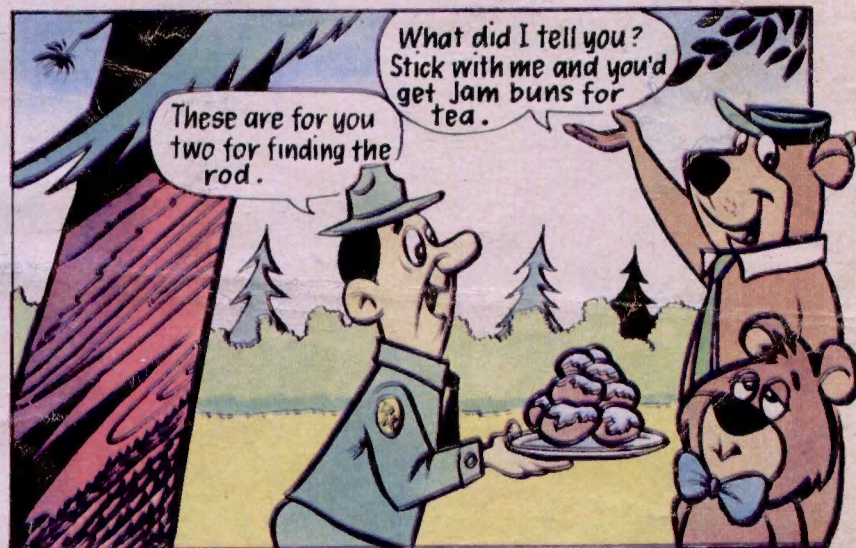

6. Ranger Smith was walking through the forest when he heard a whistle like the wind as his hat flew off his head. "That's funny", thought Boo Boo, "I thought there was a hook not a hat on the end of the line!"

7. When Ranger Smith looked for his hat he saw what Yogi Bear was up to. He hurried over and snatched not only his hat but the rod and line from Yogi. Yogi was surprised. The little boy in the picnic party recognised the rod and line.

8. Ranger Smith sent Yogi and Boo Boo back to the woods. "What a lot of fuss over a couple of jam buns", sighed Yogi. "Now we have no rod and line", said Boo Boo sadly, "so there won't be any fish for supper either."

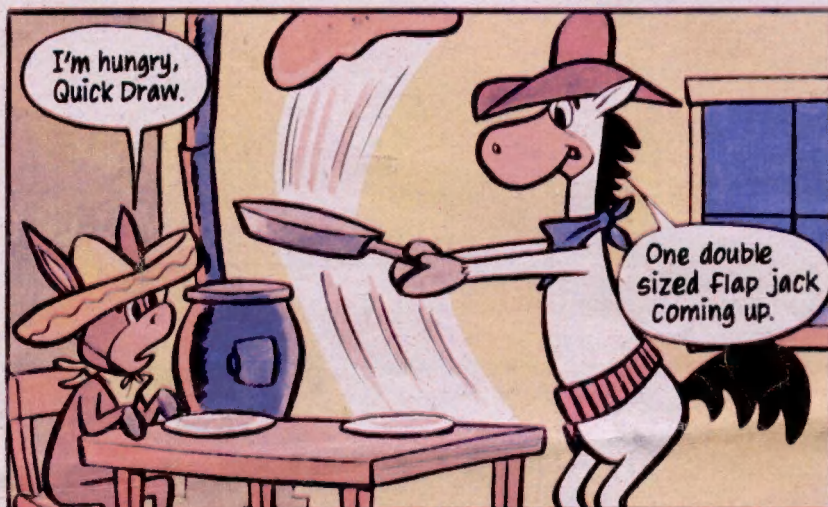

9. Yogi and Boo Boo didn't remain hungry for long for Ranger Smith caught up with them with the plate of buns. "They are for you for finding the rod", Ranger Smith said. "Well, I'll be a fisherman, but of course, he didn't."

EXCITING TIMES WITH QUICK DRAW MCGRAW

COWBOY PANCAKES

1. Quick Draw was cooking cowboy pancakes or flapjacks as they are called out West. "Here comes your supper, Baba", he cried, tossing one up in the air.

2. Up went the flap-jack but it didn't come down again. It just stuck on the ceiling. "Don't worry Baba", said Quick Draw. "I'll soon make another".

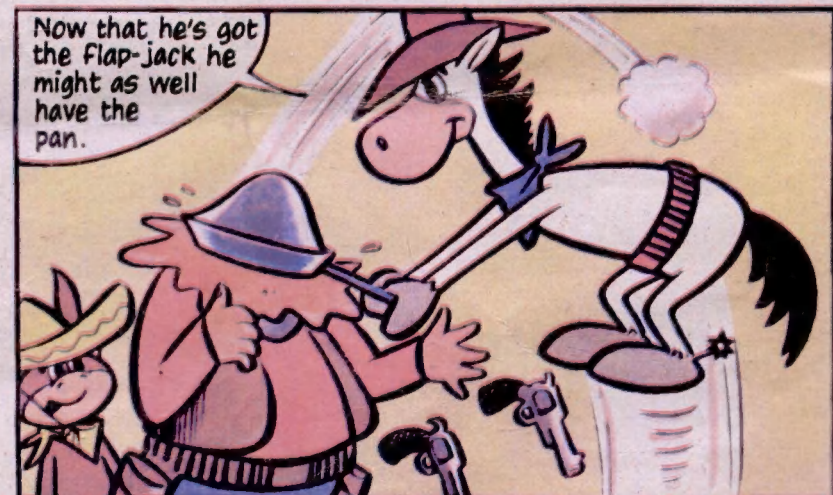

3. But while Quick Draw was busy cooking, a badman had ridden into town. "I'll give the sheriff a nice surprise", he sniggered. "I'll lock him up!"

4. Quick Draw had just stuck another flap-jack to the ceiling when the badman burst in. "Stick 'em up!" he cried. "That's what I'm doing", said Quick Draw.

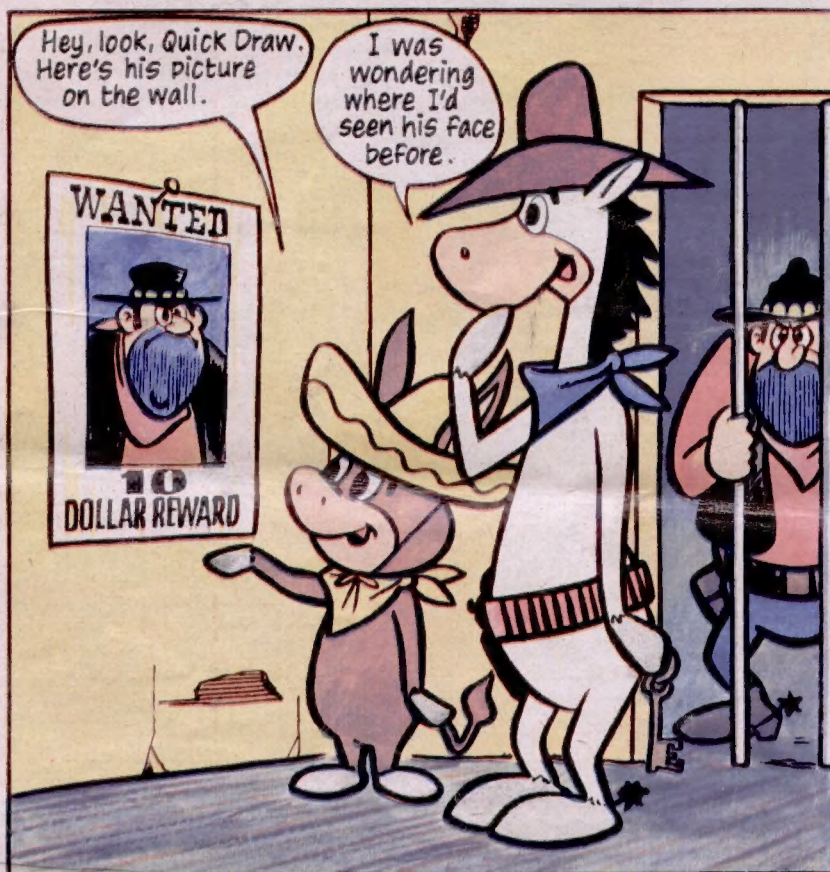

5. The badman was laughing when he saw the flap-jacks. "I shot with those", he said,

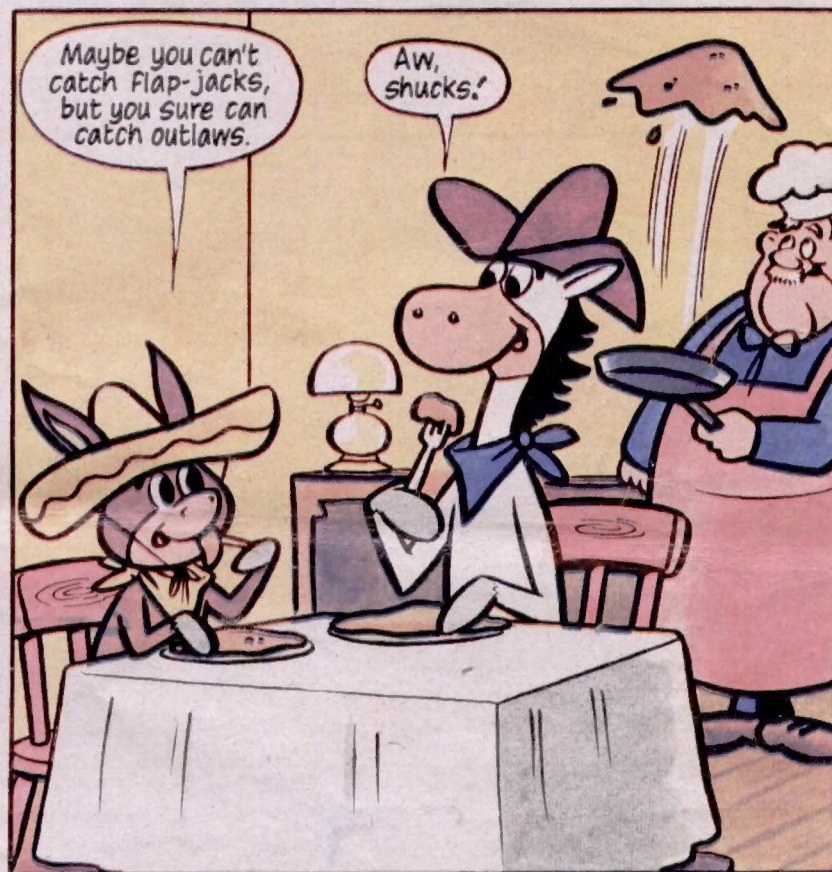

6. "Just right!" cried Quick Draw, and hit him on the head with the frying pan. "You've bent it", cried Baba. "I'll buy another", promised Quick Draw.

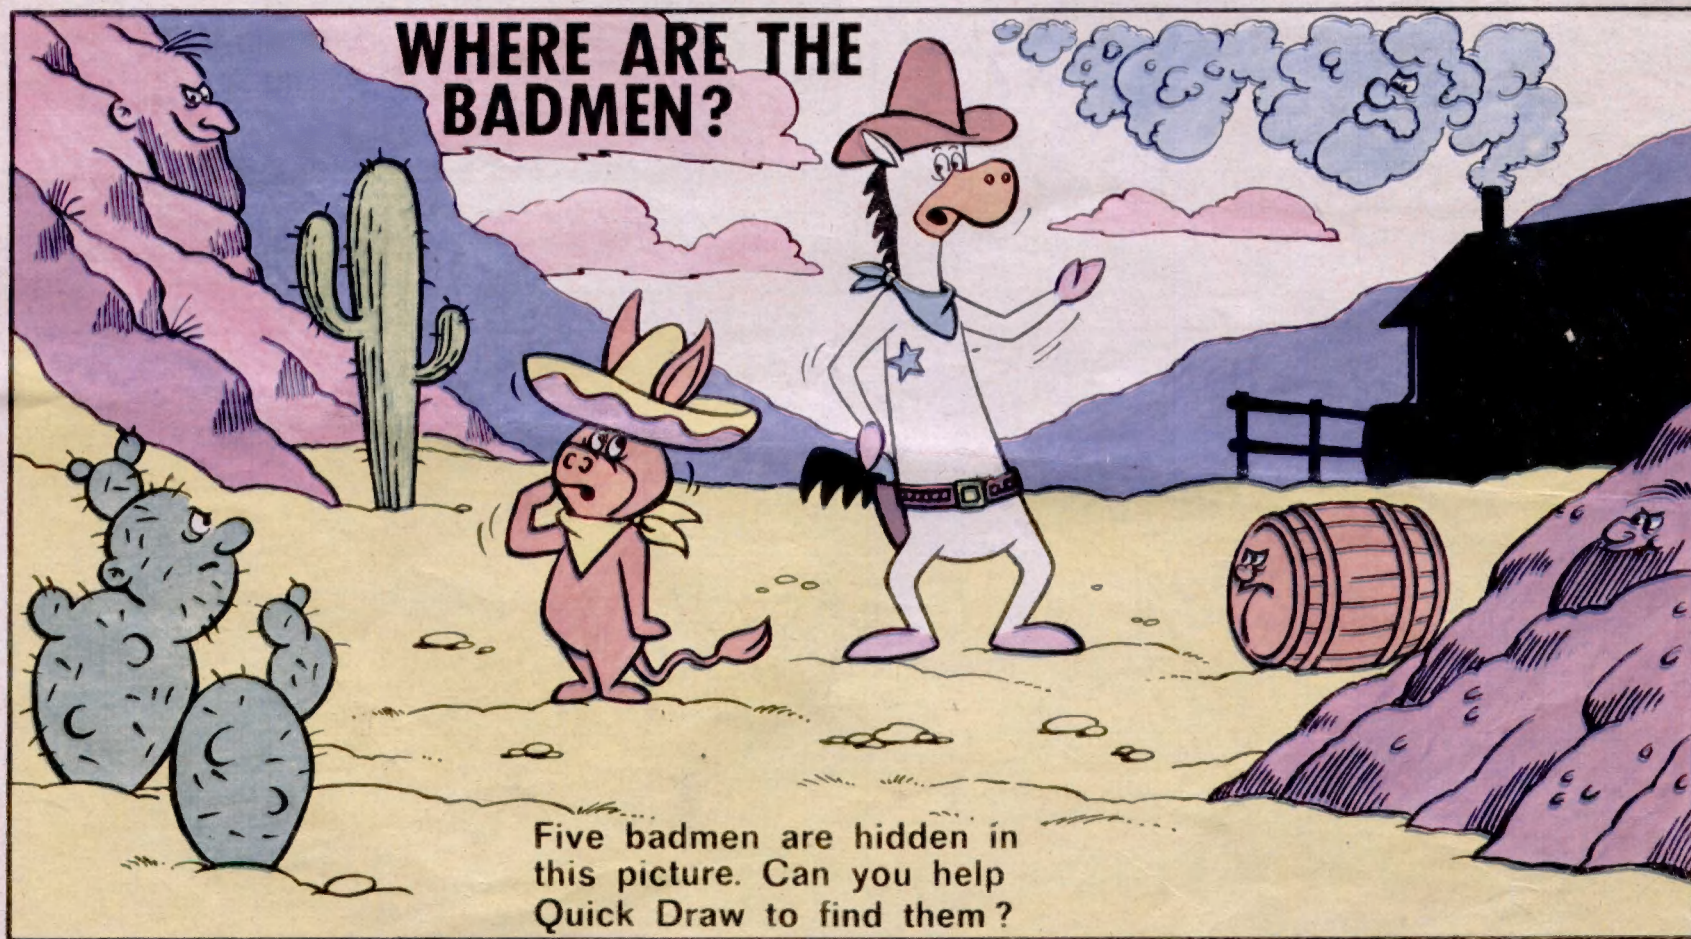

7. When they locked up the badman Baba saw the "Wanted" notice on the wall. "Who gets the reward?" he asked. "I guess we deserve it", said Quick Draw.

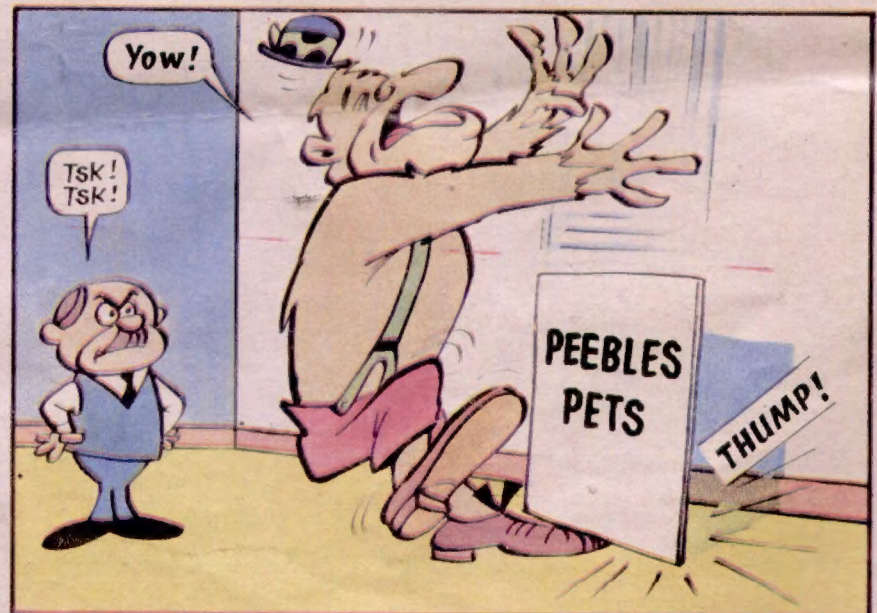

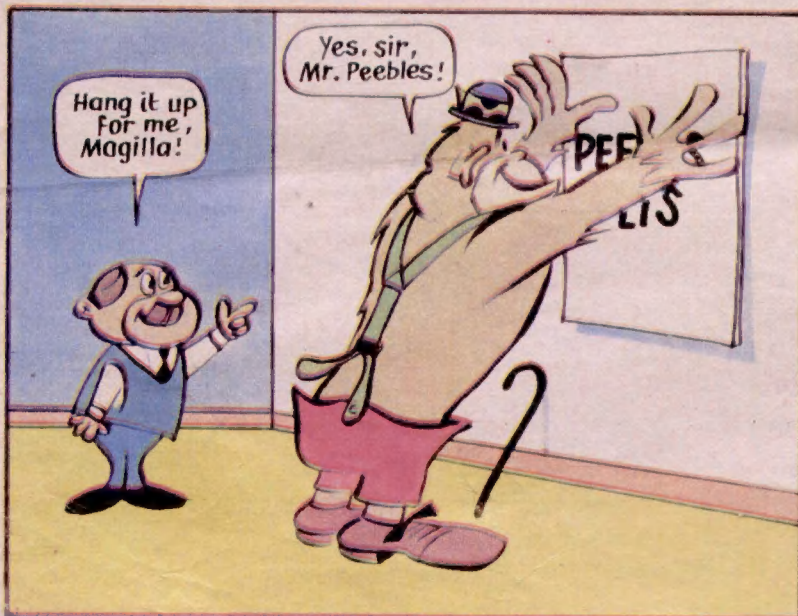

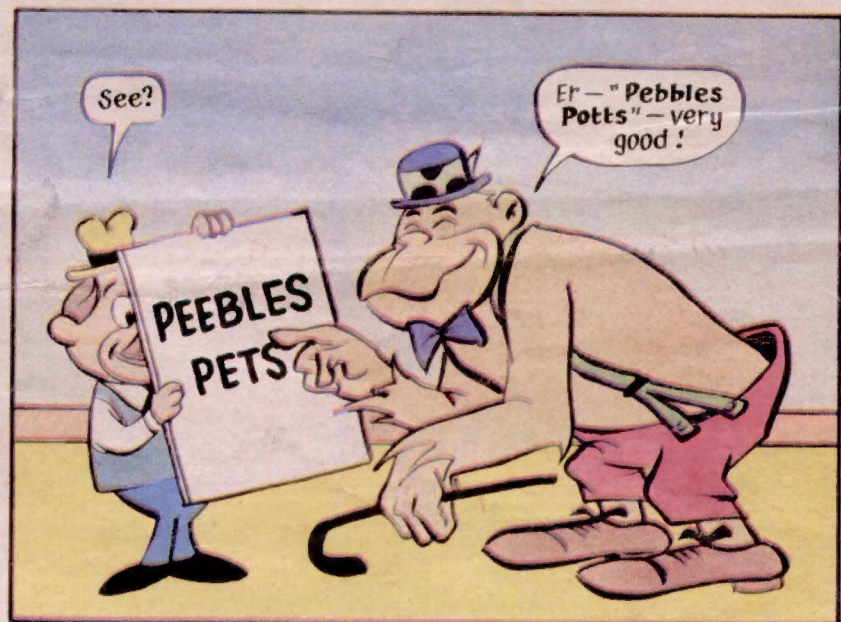

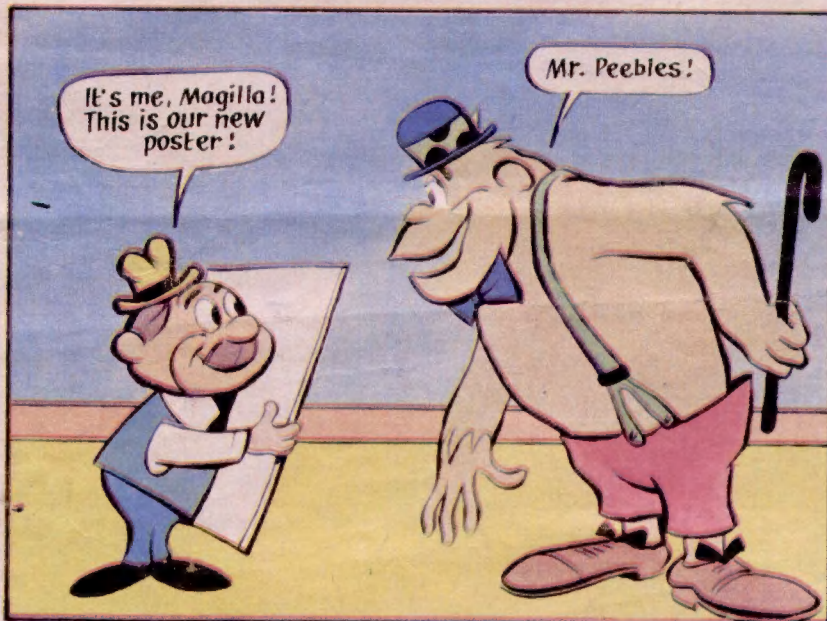

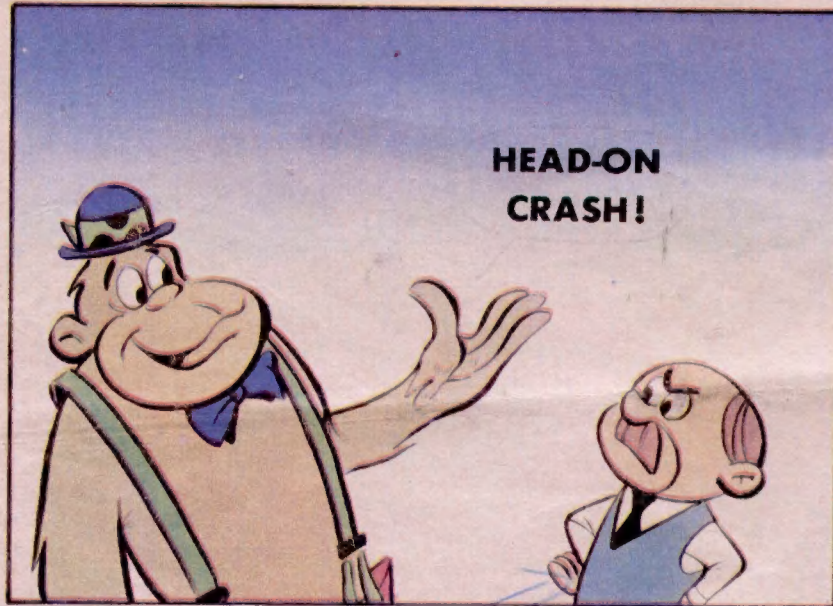

8. "It's too late to buy a frying pan now", said Quick Draw. "But we can still get some supper at the Wild West Café." "Flap-jacks at last", smiled Baba.

YOGI tells you something about PLAYING CARDS

CARDS have been amusing people for a long, long time and now that you have your own pack of miniature ones, I hope you will have a lot of fun with them.

Cards may have been brought home by the Crusaders when they returned from the East or wandering gypsies may have carried them with them. Italy seems to be the first European country to have them but the oldest cards were all picture ones. There were seventy-eight cards in the pack then instead of fifty-two as there are today and some of the old cards were square or round whereas now they are always oblong.

We were using playing cards in England at least three hundred years ago and the figures on the picture cards used here and in America are still dressed as people were in the days of our King Henry VIII. I am sure you all know the Nursery Rhyme about the Queen of Hearts who made some Tarts. A hundred years ago the figures on the picture cards were made double headed so that the cards never look as if they are upside down.

The suits are marked differently in some other countries. They have a suit called Hearts in Germany, but the others are Leaves, Bells and Acorns, instead of our Spades, Diamonds and Clubs. Spain has Cups and Gold as two of the emblems, but we all use the same number of cards in a pack.

Playing cards have often been used to help children with their lessons. When King Louis XIV of France was a little boy, his tutor used specially made cards to teach him history and geography and other subjects. Perhaps you will find your cards can be a help to you in learning to count.

Why not add up the number of cards in a suit? That's right—there are thirteen. Or play a game where everybody takes two cards and the player whose two cards add up to the highest amount is the winner. You will probably be able to think up lots of other ways of using your cards for learning as well as playing.

BOSS CAT
he baffles the gang with his trick...

"THE FOUR
KINGS"

YOU must get your pack of cards set up the way you want them before you start this trick. Take out the four Kings and the two Jacks and practice holding the six cards with the Kings fanned out so that they can be seen. But have the two Jacks hidden behind the first of the Kings—this will be the top card.

Hold the cards firmly, show them to your audience and tell them that you have taken the four Kings from the pack where they were, as usual, all together. "It's very funny", you say. "But these Kings are so friendly they just won't live apart!"

Your audience will think you are holding only four Kings (they don't know about the hidden Jacks) when they see you close up the fan of cards and place them face downwards on the rest of the pack. Now take the top card, show it to be a King, and place it at the bottom of the pack. Next take the next top card and slip it casually in the middle of the pack. Don't let your audience see it—it is really a Jack, but they must think it is a King. Do the same with the next card, which is also a Jack. Now lift the fourth card and glance at it, letting the audience see it too. It's a King, of course, and you put it back on top of the pack. There are now three Kings at the top and one at the bottom of the pack. Ask someone to cut the pack and put the lower half on top of the upper one. Then deal out all the cards face upwards and all the Kings will be found together. This little trick sure puzzles the Gang—just try it on your friends!

FREE NEXT WEEK! YOGI'S MAGIC PAPER

FOR READERS OF YOGI AND HIS TOY

Did you know that Yogi uses magic paper to learn all about his friends? Next week he is going to give all his readers some of his magic paper, so that you too will be able to have fun finding out the secrets of your chums. You will, of course, want to try it out on yourself first and you'll be amazed at the things the paper can tell you. Discover who's absent minded, who's greedy, who's going to receive a gift, and lots of other things about your friends. They'll all be envious of you for owning such a wonderful piece of magic paper.

So watch out for next week's YOGI AND HIS TOY. Everybody will want some of Yogi's magic paper so make sure of getting your copy early. YOGI AND HIS TOY is on sale every Friday.

QUICK-DRAW

tells you how to do the trick
called...
EYES"

WHEN I do this trick I have to get Baba to help me so get one of your friends to help you too. Tell the audience that you have magic eyes (this sure gets the badmen bothered when I say this) and can even see through a thick bandage, and name any card the audience chooses, so long as it's held near your face for a few seconds.

Don't use all the cards or the trick will take too long. Just choose about twelve or fifteen, it doesn't matter which ones they are, and get someone to blindfold you. Your friend then chooses a card and holds it up to your face. (Your friend must be sure he sees it and remembers which one it is). Then all the cards are laid face upwards on the table and your blindfold is removed.

Your friend points to the cards one by one, saying each time: "Is it this one?" except for the card before the one chosen which, of course, he knows. In this case he says: "Is it that one?" and you know that the next card will be the chosen one. Of course, you must wait until your friend points to it and says: "Is it this one?" so that no one will notice that he used a different word when he pointed to the previous card.

You can do this trick without your friend saying a word, if you like. In this case he gives the clue by touching every card with his first finger until he comes to the one before the chosen card. Then he touches that one with his middle finger.

Gee, how worried those badmen are when they see me do this!

HUCKLEBERRY HOUND

the secret of...
"NAMING THE CARD"

THIS trick is really quite easy, but you can mystify your friends with it. Shuffle a pack of cards and then say you will name any card one of them chooses, even though they don't show it to you.

This is how it's done. Give your friend the pack of cards and ask him to take a card from anywhere in the pack and remember which one it is. He must then place this card at the bottom of the pack and put the whole pack face downwards on the table.

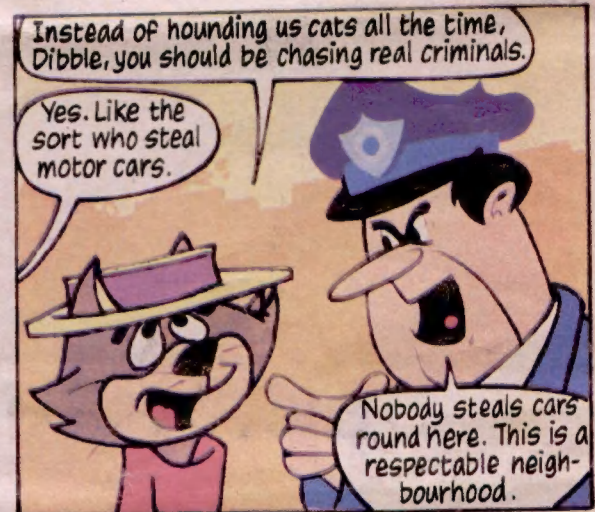

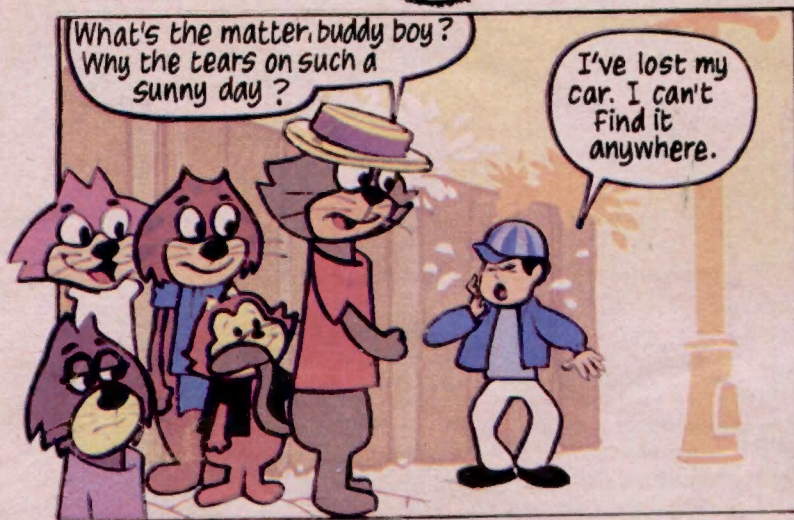

Then ask someone to cut the pack, which means taking any number of cards from the top and placing them at the bottom. Then tell one of your audience to lay out the cards face upwards, one by one, starting with the top card. Watch carefully, and when all the cards are laid out you will be able to name the card your friend chose.

The secret is that at the start of the trick you must look quietly at the card at the bottom of the pack and remember which one it is. Let's just pretend it's the Two of Hearts. You know that the card chosen by your friend will be the one that comes after the card you saw at the bottom of the pack when you began your trick. That is to say, the one that follows the Two of Hearts. But your friends won't know this and will be surprised at how clever you are when you "Name the Card!"

THE HAPPY DAYS OF HUCKLEBERRY HOUND

Yes, folks. It's me, Huck. I'm in bonny Scotland and looking forward to having lots of fun.

1. When Huckleberry Hound won a prize that allowed him to travel free all over the world, he chose Scotland for his first stop. He phoned his friends at home to tell them where he was. Ding-a-ling told him to call on his cousin, MacDing-a-ling who lived near Ben Nevis. Huckleberry said he would.

I've finished phoning my friends, ma'am. It's all yours now, ma'am.

2. Leaving the phone box, Huck politely raised his hat to somebody standing outside. "Sorry I have kept you waiting, ma'am", he said before he realised he was talking to a man wearing a kilt. "You cheeky hound! I'll teach you to make fun of me", the man shouted as he ran after Huck.

A welcome sign. I'll hide in there until he's gone by.

3. "Why do Scotsmen wear kilts that look like ladies' skirts?" thought Huck as he ran down the street with the angry man after him. "I must ask Ding-a-ling's cousin when I meet him. He is bound to know the answer". Then he saw a shop sign that read ALL VISITORS TO SCOTLAND WELCOME. Huck decided to hide inside the shop.

Good afternoon, sir. And what can we do for you? Anything catch your eye?

It might do if I go out there!

4. Instead of running by as Huck hoped he would, the man stopped outside the shop and waited. A salesman was coming over to Huck who didn't think he would be welcome very long in the shop if he didn't buy something. So he bought himself a bonnet and kilt. "You look like a true Scot now, sir", the salesman said when Huck tried them on. And indeed he did!

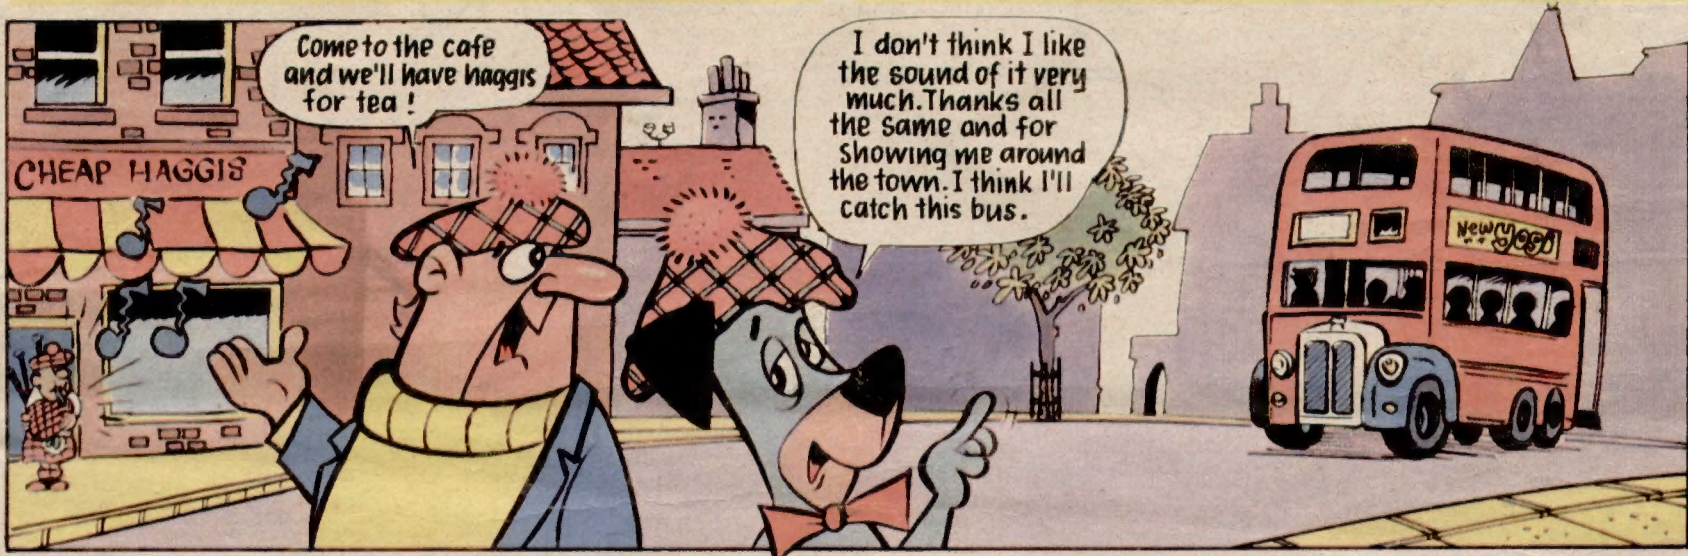

5. When Huck walked out of the shop wearing his kilt and bonnet his heart skipped a beat. The man turned round and let out a shout as he rushed at him. "Looks as if he's seen through my disguise", sighed Huckleberry Hound.

6. Huck was most surprised when, instead of thumping him, the Scotsman shook his hand. "I'm Angus MacDangle", he said. "It's always a pleasure to meet a fellow clansman. Allow me the honour of showing you around town".

7. Angus MacDangle turned out to be a most friendly Scotsman indeed. He gave Huck a wonderful time showing him all the sights of the town. "I'm so hungry I could eat a horse", said Huck, realising it was way past his tea time.

Angus laughed and said, "Come and have some haggis". As they came to a café Huck heard some bagpipes being played, but thought it was somebody groaning after eating haggis. He decided to skip the meal and hop on a passing bus.

8. Angus MacDangle didn't mind Huck missing the meal. It meant there would be more haggis for him. They parted the best of friends when Huck climbed on board the crowded bus. "Standing room only inside", called the conductor, but it wasn't long before Huck was given a seat.

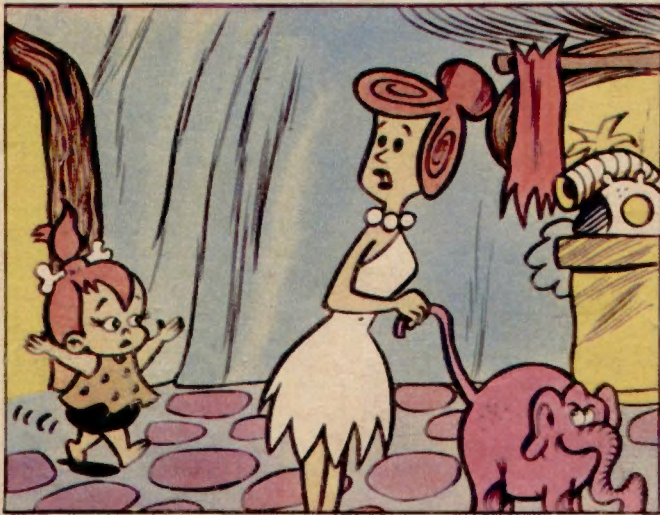

9. Huck hoped that the bus would take him to Ben Nevis so that he could meet Ding-a-ling's cousin, MacDing-a-ling. "At least, I won't have to ask him why Scotsmen wear kilts", he happily chuckled. "I think I've found out the answer all by myself!"

FUN with The FLINTSTONES

FRED FORGETS HIS LUNCH

1. Wilma Flintstone was tidying the living room when Pebbles came running in. "I've broken my tricycle, Mummy", she said. "Will Daddy mend it when he comes home to lunch?"

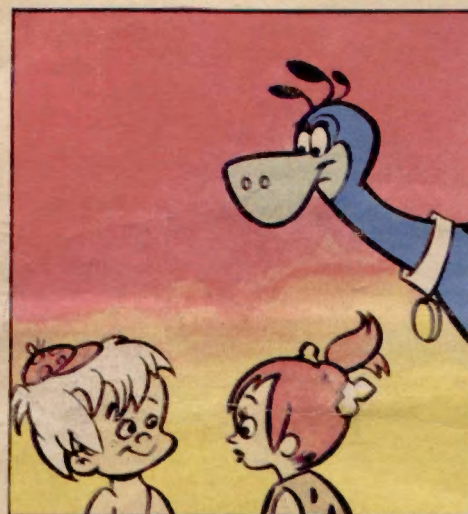

2. "He won't be home to lunch", said Wilma. "But his lunch box is on the table", Pebbles told her.

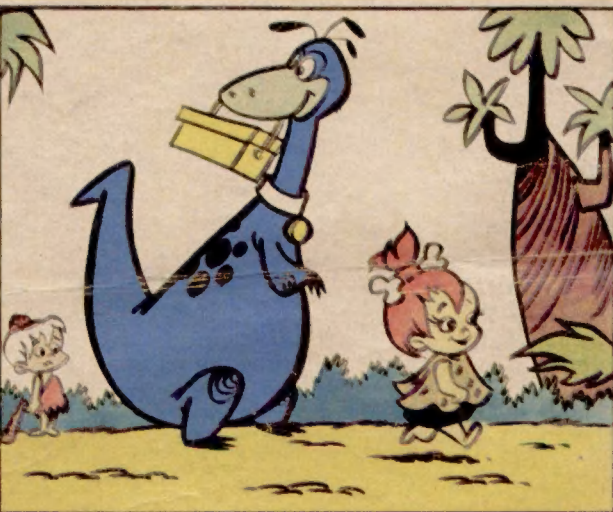

3. "He's forgotten it!" cried Wilma. "If your tricycle wasn't broken you could have taken it to him". Pebbles smiled: "I still can. Dino will come with me".

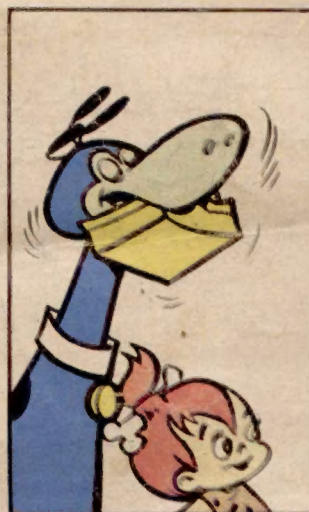

4. As Pebbles ran down the road with Dino trotting behind her, she met Bam Bam, who wanted her to stop and play. "I can't", she said. "We're taking Daddy's lunch to him".

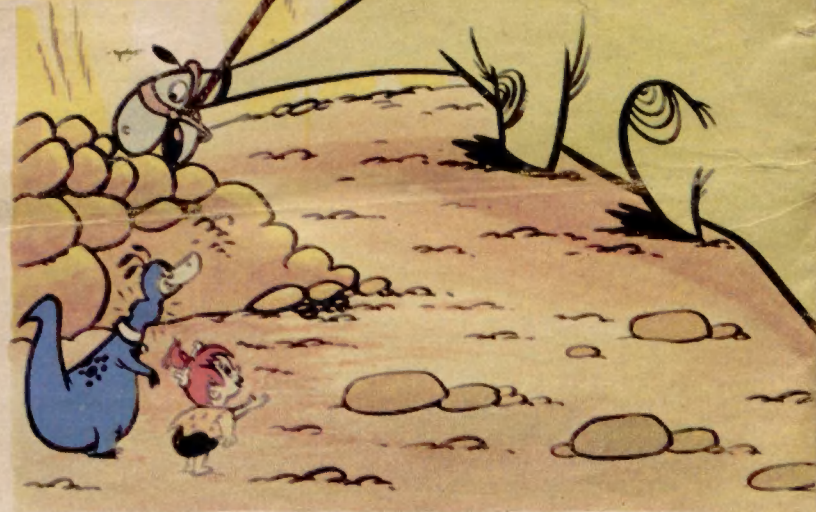

5. "Dino's not so clever as our pet, Hoppy", said Bam Bam. "He can carry things in his pouch".

6. "So could Dino if he had a pouch", said Pebbles. Dino picked up the box in his mouth. No pet was going to be smarter than he was, even if he hadn't got a pouch. Pebbles felt very proud.

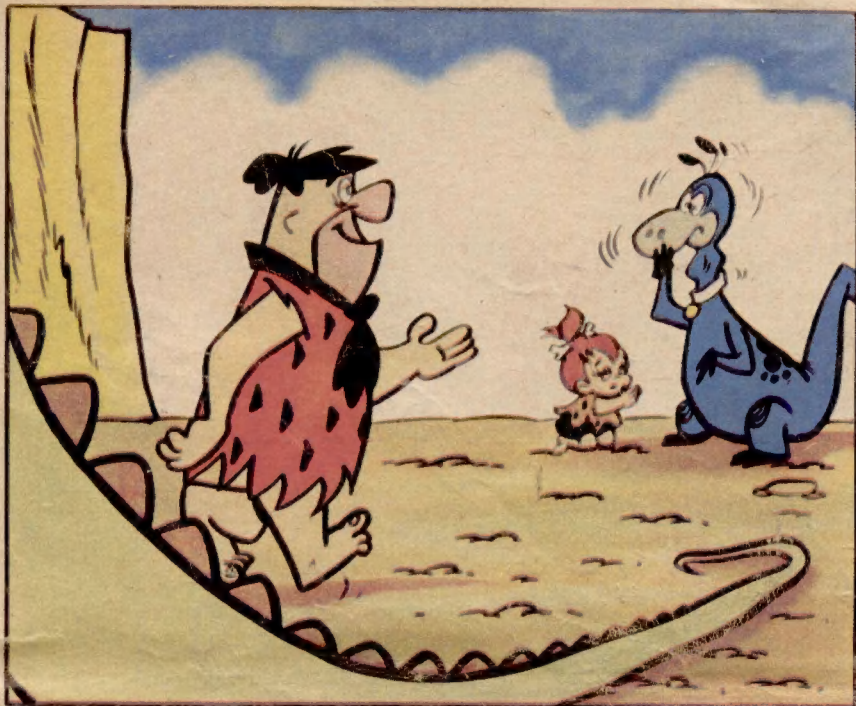

7. It was Dino's lunch time too. He forgot about Fred and ate the lunch, box and all!

8. "Hello, Daddy", called Pebbles when she reached the quarry where Fred worked with the big dinosaur digger. "We've brought your lunch for you". Fred smiled: "That's my girl. I'll be right down to get it!"

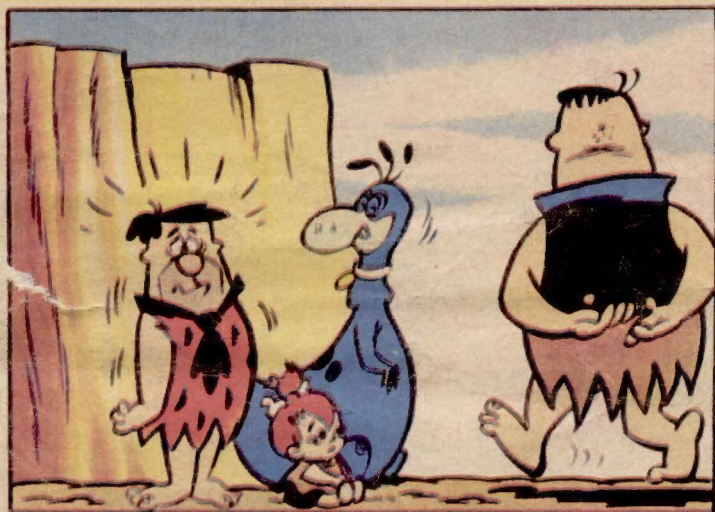

9. "Oh, boy!" cried Fred when he reached the ground. "Now for those brontoburgers your mother packed for me". Pebbles whispered to Dino: "Give him the lunch box". But, of course, he couldn't. He'd eaten it!

10. At first Pebbles thought Dino had lost it on the way along. But when she saw the funny lump in his throat she knew what he'd done. "Naughty Dino", she said. "You've eaten Daddy's lunch!"

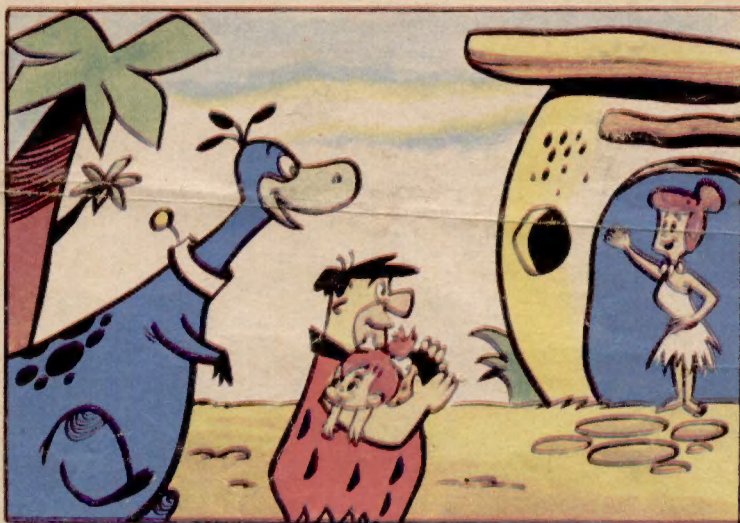

11. "Oh, no", groaned Fred loudly, when he realised what had happened to his lunch. It was such a loud groan that Fred's boss heard him and came over to see what was the matter.

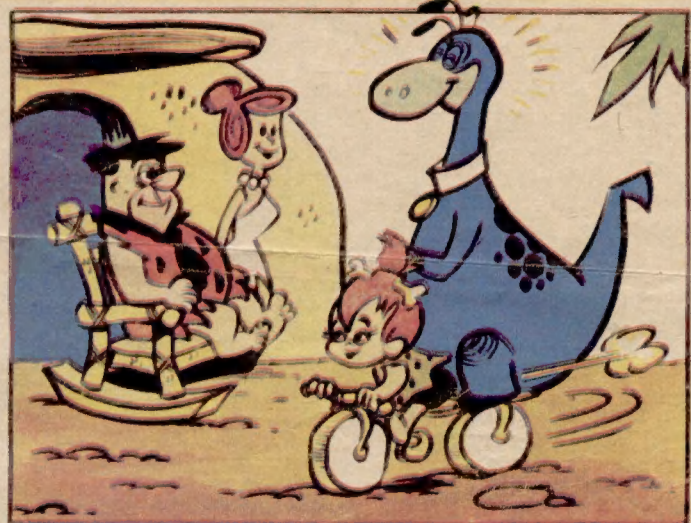

12. "You look pale, Flintstone", he said. "Eat your lunch". Fred groaned: "I can't!"

13. "You must be ill if you can't eat your lunch", said the boss. "Take the afternoon off and go home".

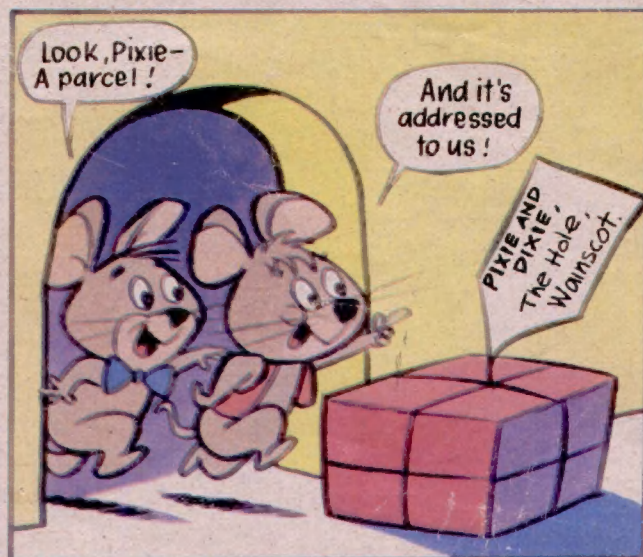

14. Fred hurried off home with Pebbles and Dino before the boss could change his mind. "He didn't ask me why I couldn't eat my lunch", smiled Fred. "Now you're home will you mend my tricycle?" asked Pebbles.

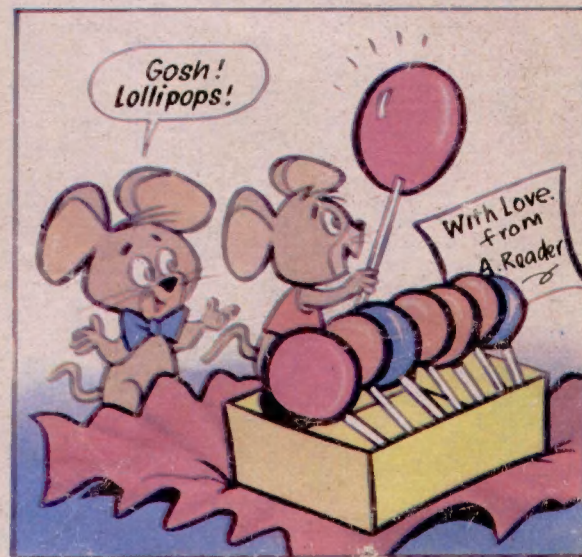

15. So Fred had a nice lunch, and mended the tricycle. Then he sat in the sun and watched Pebbles and Dino playing. "This is better than work", he chuckled happily. "That Dino's the best pet we've had yet!"

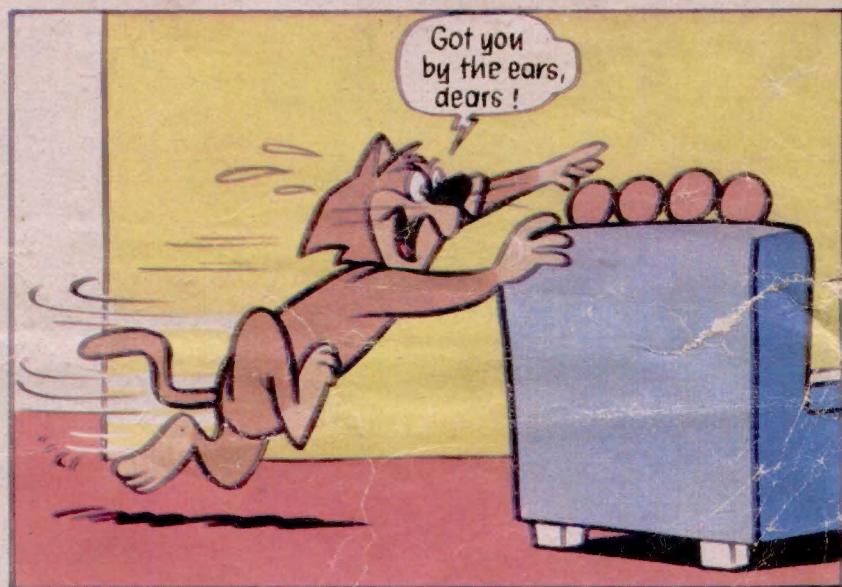

1. Bright and early one fine morning, there came a knock-a-diddy-knock-knock at the door of Pixie and Dixie's house. Well, it wasn't so much of a door—more of a hole, really. The little mice looked out to see.

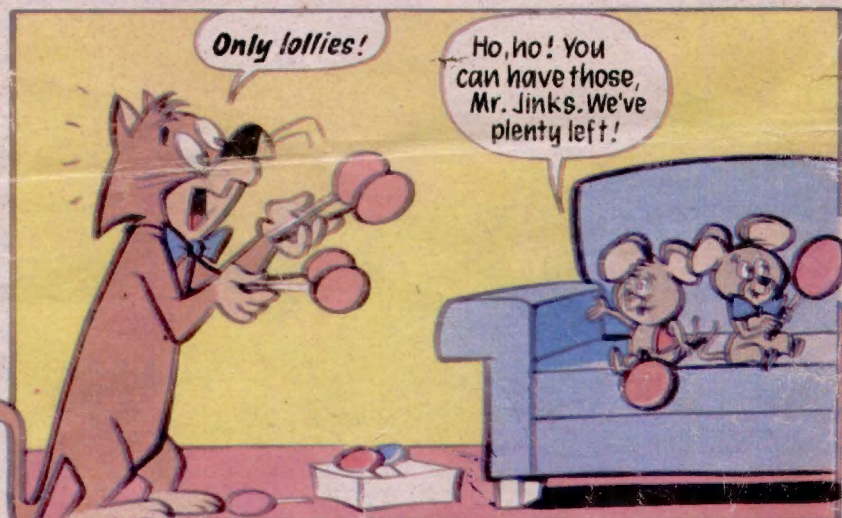

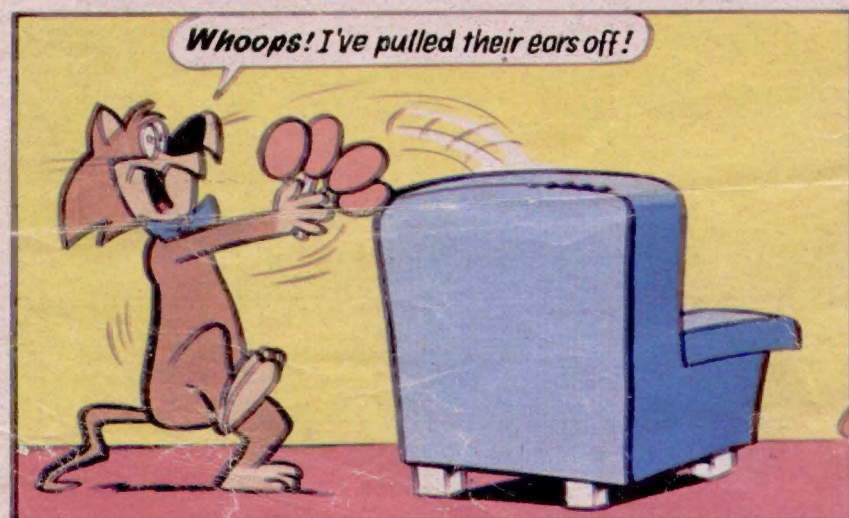

2. It was a parcel—the postman had brought it. Excitedly Pixie and Dixie unwrapped it to see who it was from. Inside was a box and inside that box were lollipops!

3. A kind reader of our comic had sent our little pets a present! Pixie and Dixie love lollies, even if they don't taste of cheese! So they settled down to enjoy them. But round the corner came a cat.

4. Yes, it was Mr. Jinks, the puss who loves to chase mice. "Meeeces", he calls them! And Mr. Jinks clapped his eyes on what looked like Pixie and Dixie's big ears, peeping over the top of a big armchair.

5. Mr. Jinks tippy-toed up behind the chair and made a big grab for those mouse ears. But what a shock he got! He pulled, and instead of catching the two mice, he caught only the ears! Or so he thought!

6. But of course they weren't big ears Mr. Jinks was holding—they were four lollipops that looked just like mouse ears! How our little chums laughed at Mr. Jinks's face! But they are kind, too, and let the puss have the lollies to eat!
